

COUNSELING AND COMMUNITY PSYCHOLOGY

The Certificate and Associate Degree in Counseling and Community Psychology is designed to provide a foundation of study to the undergraduate who is preparing to enter one of the helping professions such as psychology, education, social work, criminal justice or nursing. A total of 60 credits is required to obtain this Associate Degree. The NMSU Grants Campus CEPY program includes the lower-division courses required for entry into the Counseling and Community Psychology baccalaureate program at New Mexico State University. Alternatively, students may opt to transfer to a similar program at another four-year institution. Completion of this program does NOT guarantee admission into the Counseling and Community Psychology Program at NMSU Las Cruces.